Slavic Linguistics Society

The Slavic Linguistics Society is an organization devoted to the systematic and scholarly study of the Slavic languages. Membership in the Society is open to all linguists regardless of field, theory, framework or school. Members are entitled to present papers at annual meetings and receive the Journal of Slavic Linguistics, which is the official journal of the Slavic Linguistics Society. Individuals receive a subscription to JSL with annual membership in the Slavic Linguistics Society. To join, go to <http://www.slaviclinguistics.org>.

SLS is governed by an Executive Board consisting of five members elected at the annual meeting for three-year staggered terms. The Executive Board negotiates arrangements for the annual meetings with host institutions. Meetings alternate between North America and Europe.

Executive Committee Members

Daniel Collins, The Ohio State University

Frank Y. Gladney, University of Illinois, Urban-Champaign (Chair)

Lenore Grenoble, University of Chicago

Catherine Rudin, Wayne State College

Andrea Sims, The Ohio State University

Guidelines for Contributors

JSL is intended to address issues in the description and analysis of Slavic languages of general interest to linguists, regardless of theoretical orientation. Papers dealing with any aspect of synchronic or diachronic Slavic phonetics, phonology, morphology, syntax, semantics, or pragmatics will be considered, as long as they raise substantive problems of broad theoretical concern or propose significant descriptive generalizations. Comparative studies and formal analyses are especially encouraged. Submissions ranging from full-length articles to shorter remarks and replies will be considered, along with substantive reviews.

Manuscripts should be initially submitted to the general editorial address, either electronically in .pdf format, or by mail, in four copies. All submissions should be double-spaced throughout; copy should be anonymous and include a one-paragraph abstract. A computer file (preferably .doc) will be requested before publication; we ask that you use only Unicode fonts. A detailed style sheet appeared in vol. 2, no. 2; it is available electronically from our www page, or a printed copy may also be requested from any editor.

Visit our World Wide Web page: <<http://www.slaviclinguistics.org>>

The Journal of Slavic Linguistics is published twice annually. Each volume consists of two issues, totaling approximately 340 pages: Winter-Spring and Summer-Fall. Library and institutional subscriptions are available from Slavica Publishers at the following rate:

Institutions $60.00

Individuals should join the Slavic Linguistic Society (<http://www.slaviclinguistics.org>), which carries with it an annual subscription to JSL.

Airmail supplement for institutions outside of North America: $10.00/year.

A limited number of back issues are available for $24.00 apiece.
